ABOUT NOISE POLLUTION CLEARINGHOUSE

The Noise Pollution Clearinghouse (NPC) is North America's premier advocacy organization dedicated solely to increasing Peace and Quiet and reducing noise, the number one quality of life concern, as tracked by the U.S. Census Bureau and NYC's 311 hotline.

Since 1997, NPC has been the most comprehensive resource for questions about noise and how to take effective action to reduce it. NPC also serves as a pioneering noise research institute and a constant advocate for Peace and Quiet. Whether it is mapping the loss of quiet places during the last 100 years, protecting the remaining quiet lands, promoting quieter lawn equipment, pioneering new ways to model and measure aviation noise at airports, developing an app to test if noise levels are damaging your hearing, or helping hundreds of communities revise their noise ordinances, NPC is the place to turn for Peace and Quiet.

NPC's mission is to promote more civil and livable cities and more natural rural and wilderness areas by reducing noise—and to minimize the health effects of noise.
